HONGKONG, OCTOBER 187, 1890. In another column we reproduce an article on China by the Peking correspondent of th Times. The article is remarkable for the very grave accusation brought against Co lonel Pouriara, the Russian military at. tache, of withholding important information from his Government for the purpose furthering his own ambitious ends. Colonel POUTLATA, it is alleged, has a policy of his own, which he wants to tempt Russia!to carr out for his benefit, that policy being an in. d rections to hoist the red cone pointing downvasion of Manchuria from the Amur, by topographical information, as well as the military, financial, and political data necessary to conduct an expedition with success. But of what nature is the information the attache is accused of withholding? In the middle of the article we are told that "France and Russia know to a nicety the military force of China, at least they would know if their agents chose to give the exact details," and then follows the charge against the Russian agent of furthering a policy of his own. But in the earlier part of the article we are told that he ! hes not only sent full reports to his Government, but supplemented them by urgent recommendations. The writer appears to have changed the intended purport of his article while in come of writing it and labded himself in a contradiction. Colonel POUTIATA, for aught we know to the contrary, may be as designing I RADING as he is represented, but it would be unfair to accept that view of his character on the mere strength of the statements made by the Times correspondent. In reproducing the article as one, of general interest we have thought it only fair to say this much on its personal aspect as affecting an officer hold. ing an important und responsible post.

All Manchuria and Korea, we are told will fall to Russia through natural causes, the by the Chinese Consul. He was dressed, in more pressure of the strong on the week Post Chinese clother and was on the print of embarks mere pressure of the strong on the weak Power, the compact formation on the loose formation, being sufficient to work out that result, given time and non-interference. are further told, in the concluding lines of the article, that "It is possible for Russia to obtain all she requires from China now, materials, and has been attended by a Japanese as she has done before, by negotiation; doctor, and another IGNATIEFF in Peking might, by secure for his Government the mastery. The costly struggle to recover Kashgaria trocession of Kuldis are a sufficient proof In ordering it is only necessary to state that China will not be easily elbowed out of her northern provinces. As to Kores, the case is somewhat different. The tie between the Peniusular Kingdom and her suzerain is not different in character from that which formerly bound Annam and Burmah to China, and might possibly prove not much more difficult to break. The correspondent tells us that Korea is a pear that is ripening fast for Russia. Whether the simile is altogether apt or not, there can be no doubt, Russia means to have the country, or at least to secure one or more ports which will relieve her from her present dependence on Vladivostock, which is blocked by ice for several months in the year. China naturally would resent any such movement on Russia's | Mr. Wilkinson was for the plaintiffs; the deport, but whether she would offer the same active resistance as she did to the acquisition problematical. The value she places on Korea is no doubt higher even than that she, might be deterred from entering upon a war ing she might lose not only Korea but might also see Manchuria wrested from her in the struggle, just as in the case of the war with France she was in danger of losing not only plied for these shares.
